LEFT ALONE HERE Mabel Armstrong, of Harrison-and Alone.

burg, is Poverty-Stricken

Mabel Armstrong, a young girl from Harrisonburg, Va., was given shelter in the Methodist Mission, at Nineteenth and Main Streets, Saturday night, after she had told of a man's forsaking her and her bitter woe.

She gave her age as twenty, is orphaned, and a cripple. The story she told was pitiful in the extreme. A Richmond man, named Henry Echo, stated the girl, who had been in the habit of visiting Harrisonburg occasionally, persuaded her to come to Richmond, suying that he could secure a position for her, In a wagon, with its discomfort and bare insufficiencies, they made the long and tollsome journey across the valley and tollsome journey across the valley and over the mountains to Richmond. Night overtook them in the mountains, and they

over the mountains to Richmond. Night overtook them in the mountains, and they spent the night in the wagon, sleeping to the accompaniment of the hoots of cowls and the noisy mysteries of the hoots of cowls and the noisy mysteries of the hills. They stopped near Staunton and Charlottesville, and finally reached Richmond about 9 o'clock Saturday morning.

Here the three men left her and famished and broken in body and spirit, she applied at the mission for aid. She was cared for, and yesterday evening she went to stay with friends at First and Clay Streets.

She has a brother, Sam Armstrong, working in Richmond, but she does not know his whereabouts. Three positions have already been offered her, but she is yet undecided as to what to do.

When living in Harrisonburg, Mabbi Armstrong worked at the pottery and cooked for her living. Her hands show the unmistakable signs of toll. She is of an independent spirit, and seems willing to work if suitable employment can be found. She has written her uncle, Sam Leslie, in Harrisonburg, of her situation, and is now awaiting a reply. Notwithstanding the stress of her situation, the young woman is bearing up well, but she prosents a pathetic figure, a stranger in a strange city, and seems unserving of all the compassionate interest that can be shown her.

that can be shown her.
